4.1. Methodological overview

This subject is committed to an active learning method that requires an open-minded attitude and continuous work.

The expository activities of the teaching staff need the echo of the perception and involvement of the students, as active agents of their own knowledge.

This requires an open-minded attitude and continuous work.

The subject is presented in an active, practical, reflective and critical way.

It runs from the theoretical classes T1 and the practical classes T2

The design of the activities is designed so that the theoretical contents are understood without losing the necessary comprehensive vision of them and their practical application.

The subject is presented in an active, practical, reflective and critical way.

It runs from the theoretical classes T1 and the practical classes T2

4.2. Learning tasks

Continuous assessment requires a degree of attendance both in the theoretical classes and in the practices. Those who choose it will carry out the following activities throughout the course:

- Written theoretical-practical test/s.
- Practical or dynamic activities (T2) within the corresponding group with their subsequent pooling and discussion.

Those who opt for the single global evaluation, on the date indicated in the official calendar, must demonstrate that they have reached the same level. For this, they will have to pass a written test of the subject as a whole and an oral defense where the reason for the work carried out will be given.

Each teacher within their corresponding group will indicate the dynamics in a personalized way because for the proper preparation of these tests, it is recommended to inform the teaching staff in the first weeks of the course in order to make it possible to attend tutorials. and supervise
