1. General information

We all assume that thought is emancipatory, but we are less and less clear about what it means. In this subject we dedicate an important time to study the origin and the main practices that have brought us this idea, so that we are able to evaluate its consequences in our present. In the framework of the degree, this subject is an elective. Its objective is to open a time for careful reading and reflection based on knowledge that has already been obtained in other subjects, such as History of Modern Philosophy I and II in a more panoramic way.

ODS: 4, 5, 10, 11, 12 and 16.

2. Learning results

The student, in order to pass this subject, must demonstrate the following results...

Knowledge of the main texts and problems of modern philosophy according to the program proposed by the teacher Reading of the fundamental texts of this period, according to the reading guide proposed by the teacher Acquisition of the elements of historical analysis that connect the texts and problems of the work with our present Use of the main sources of documentation required for the preparation of a research paper Production of a quality research work as a final objective of the subject's learning.
